CIOB Global Construction Summit

Wednesday 30 June 2010, Shanghai

Building Better Cities, East Meets West

The built environment is central to the quality of life for everyone, everywhere.

In 2008, 50% of the world's population lived in urban areas. By 2050 this is likely to grow to 70 per cent. However with urban growth we see the urbanization of poverty and the development of slum cities, with poverty growing faster in cities than in rural areas.

However, through urbanization China has succeeded in lifting many hundreds of millions of people out of poverty. Urbanization has been an engine of economic growth, which in turn has created unprecedented growth in consumption and living standards in little more than 30 years.

Raising standards of living has the consequence of increasing greenhouse gases and many other kinds of pollution. Whilst the carbon dioxide produced per capita in China remains significantly lower than in the west, with the USA at four times the level of China, as a nation China leads in the production of greenhouse gases.

It is now recognized that between 40 and 50 per cent of carbon dioxide emissions are associated with buildings and what we do in them. In the UK 27 per cent of carbon dioxide generation comes from our homes. The requirement for the construction industry to reduce emissions in new and existing buildings will be the biggest challenge of the first half of the 21st century.

The theme of Shanghai Expo, 'Better Cities; Better Life', challenges the construction industry to tackle these profound issues. CIOB Global Construction Summit, Shanghai 2010 - Building Better Cities, East Meets West is inextricably bound up with finding sustainable solutions to the new challenges facing us.

This CIOB conference will address the political, economic and industrial themes in 'Building Better Cities', as well as the personal challenges facing professionals in the construction industry.

Sustainability...it's at the heart of our industry.
